‘Camp Millionaire’ Founder to Educate Dos Pueblos High School Students About Money

With today’s economy, the road to financial freedom is getting longer and longer. The money management path that adults have been using for years may not be the right path for today’s generation. As students graduate from high school and begin to become financially independent, will they know what to do with their money? Elisabeth Donati, author and speaker on financial literacy, will be bringing her Camp Millionaire financial awareness program to students in the Career Connections class at Dos Pueblos High School from May 11 – 22.

“Learning personal saving and investing techniques is not stressed in the classroom,” Donati says. “By the time teenagers leave home they have no clue what to do with their college loan money, checkbook, or credit card offers they receive.”

The DP High Career Connections class exposes students to all career options and teaches them how to prepare themselves to enter the world of work. During the two week visit, Donati, using The Money Game and other unique activities from her Camp Millionaire program, will teach the students the following essential financial principles:

- Pay yourself first
- Invest in assets that produce passive income for your future
- Financial freedom is your choice and your responsibility

That and a whole lot more.
